Where would Australian society be if we did not have voluntary workers? What would our future be if we neglected to read new books to understand more of life and the world we live in?

Today Ken's role is to find and manage volunteers to market Christian books in places that are not commercially strong and often where living can be hard. He is the personnel bloke with CLC Australasia Ltd, a not-for-profit literature mission. Remote places present him with interesting recruiting challenges.

He looks back on forty years since Port Kembla Steelworks, being a film distributor, a manager, a trainer, an advisor, and supporting his wife to run the Canberra Christian Bookworld store and its particular outreach to the ACT/ SE NSW region.
