Education leadership and its delivery to the students of a school are under high scrutiny in the public arena like it has never been before. Everyone knows that good education opens the door for future well being of children.

Phillip graduated from University of Wollongong in 1980 in pursuit of a career that today has him head of the Anglican co-educational day school, Radford College, Bruce, ACT, across Years PK to 12. He has held this post since 2009. In 2014 he will take up the position of headmaster of Barker College in Sydney.

This School has twice received the ACT award for community service under his leadership. A previous head-ship gave opportunity to have an education strategy for inner city indigenous students. Phillip is the National Chair Elect of the Assoc. of Heads of Independent Schools of Australia.

Phillip has many topical issues on his mind to raise with us that will challenge the present thinking. Come and enjoy good company over Breakfast.
